

Should we separate the art from the artist?
Page 2

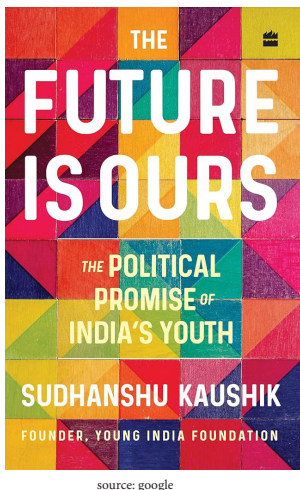

Our obsession with celebrity culture
Page 2

23 things I learned at 23
Page 4

Youth representation in politics ; held at BIC

Saranyaa Ramesh

Sudhanshu Kaushik, presented a talk on his book, "The Future Is Ours - The Political Promise of India's Youth" at the Bangalore International Center on 26 Feb. The talk was followed by a Q&A with moderator, Subashish Badra. Sudhanshu Kaushik, an international youth activist presented his book based on the pivotal role of young Indians in the 2024 elections. Part explanation and part a call to action, The Future Is Ours aims to foreground youth rights in the country's politics and the electoral system. It touches upon understanding the political process and the importance of youth representation. Amongst other things, it includes a passionate appeal to lower the age of candidacy from 25 to 21. "Indian politics is in a crisis of representation of younger people who are a large number," he stated. Further, the talk delved deep into the systemic barriers that hold the youth back from voting. "A big problem is for people away from home and can't vote. However there is an annexure 4.1 that people away from home can vote through," he said. Throughout the talk, he touched upon topics such as gerontocracy, ageism etc.

source: google

Khushi, an audience member spoke of her experience at the event. "The talk was a mind-opener, and gave me an insight on systematic barriers, statistical evidence and steps to combat the challenge of a gerontocracy," she said. The entry to the event was free of cost and was open to all political enthusiasts.

An entrepreneur's guide to the pawsome world

Saranyaa Ramesh

For Bhavana, a 21-year-old student at MCC, providing for animals has always been a cause close to her heart. She speaks to Saranyaa Ramesh about channeling her love of animals into her passion project. Bhavana's love and enthusiasm does not go unnoticed in our Zoom call. She sits down to talk to me after having rescued a kitten. Growing up surrounded by a variety of animals from turtles to mice, she has taken care of any animal that comes her way. After graduating from high school, she wanted to pursue veterinary science but could not due to various reasons. This, however, fuelled the desire to pursue her passion further. In her gap years, she began dog walking and grooming her dogs - Spark and Moon. Her work attracted positive attention from onlookers and through word of mouth, she began her journey of pet

Bhavana with her dog, Spark grooming. When asked about her favorite memory, Bhavana smiled ear to ear while talking about it - the first dog that she groomed, Shiro. "The owner told me that Shiro is very aggressive, and hates getting his nails cut. But the dog behaved so well with me, and the owners were taken aback," she said. Bhavana believes that the pet grooming industry has a lot of potential. "I'd love to open my grooming center," she mentioned when asked about her plans. She currently works in marketing at a pet food company and wishes to start her line of pet treats. Taking on various roles of being a college student, an entrepreneur, an animal activist and so much more, Bhavana is all set to take on the world. Kindled by her unwavering affection for animals, she has taken the first stride toward inspiring an impactful change in the world.

Chithkala Ramesh's 'Dear Pandemic' Exhibition at CKP

Saranyaa Ramesh

Karnataka Chitrakala Parishath hosted, "Dear Pandemic" a solo art show by Chithkala Ramesh, from 2 to 12 February. It was an art show exhibiting a profound conversation between the artist and the pandemic through postcards followed by a short film of her creative process on producing her artwork. The show, 'Dear Pandemic,' recounts moments of reflection, encounters with people, places and hope that shaped the artist's journey during the unprecedented times of the pandemic. In this exhibition, Artist Chithkala presents the world gripped by the lockdown, witnessed through her experiences and lived memories from her fragile existence during that time.

"These are not just artworks, these are stories" said Chithkala. The show captures tangible memories from the past, showcasing emotions that transpired in the face of isolation and uncertainty. Where the ordinary and mundane transcends into meaningful moments, turning it into a meticulously etched visual diary. These intimate conversations with herself, forged around the instances of vulnerability, strength and resilience, inspired the creation of this series of heartfelt visual letters, in the form of postcard paintings. "My goal was to move people and inspire them through my art and the response has been overwhelming," she stated. The entry to the show was free of cost and open to all art enthusiasts.

Democracy v/s Disinformation talk held at BIC

Saranyaa Ramesh

Sreenivasan Jain, Supriya Sharma and Dr. Vasu HV were in conversation with Dhanya Rajendran at the Bangalore International Center on 5 March. The conversation revolved around the theme of democracy v/s disinformation in the context of the book, "Love Jihad and other fictions," and was followed by a Q&A session. Love Jihad and Other Fictions is a book that debunks the viral falsehoods tearing India apart. Co-authored by three award-winning journalists - Sreenivasan Jain, Supriya Sharma and Mariyam Alavi - the book interrogates inflammatory conspiracy theories centred on the assertion that India's minorities are plotting to weaken Hindus. These claims are further amplified by politicians, the mainstream media, and countless social media posts, a trend likely to accelerate as the Lok Sabha election approaches. Everybody in the panel unanimously took a stand against the current ruling party. "We shouldn't be neutral," said Mr. Vasu, "even as media organizations." With the widespread use of social media and messaging platforms, false narratives can spread rapidly, often targeting specific communities or political factions. When asked on how we can combat this,

Mr. Sreenivasan Jain responded by saying that the onus isn't only on media houses and civic society but, also on the people in power. "We don't see enough pushback from the election commission or law enforcement." Historian Ramachandra Guha was also present and presented his inputs on the panel discussion. The entry to the event was free of cost and was open to all political enthusiasts.

Chitrakala Parishath hosts Souq Market

Saranyaa Ramesh

The Souq Market art, and crafts exhibition was held in Karnataka Chitrakala Parishath from 9th to 18th Feb. The exhibition displayed various art, craft and handloom products from all over India. Over 100 vendors and 75 artisans are expected to participate in the market. It showcased various products ranging from jewellery to paintings, handloom sarees to antique products. The event offered a wide range of products on display for customers to choose from. Programs such as live karaoke, magic show performances and fire show performances were presented across the 10 day mela. Mahesh Kumar, the salesperson of MK Handloom, a stall that sells dress materials. saree and dupattas, sourced from Bihar, spoke highly of his experience at the mela. "The response has been very good, the feedback from the customers have been positive," he said. Kavita, a salesperson from the Orissa jewellery store stated that the customers love buying jewellery from her store. "arrings are the bestselling items," she said. Entry and parking to the exhibition are free and Karnataka Chitrakala Parishath hosts these exhibitions once a month, for 10 days.

ANYA-SCAPES

Estd. 2024

How far will our obsession with celebrities go?

In a recent development, Tamil actor Vijay has ventured into politics, establishing the Tamilaga Vettri Kazhagam (TVK), adding to the growing list of celebrities turned politicians. This trend raises a crucial question about the extent of our society's obsession with celebrities. While iconic figures like MGR and Jayalalitha having successfully transitioned from the silver screen to the world of politics, the question remains: can celebrities truly represent our societal and individual needs? However, our obsession with celebrities obsession extends beyond politics. The rise of parasocial relationships, which are one-sided connections with celebrities, has been made more possible by 24-hour internet access and increased online dependency. While these interactions have remained largely one-sided, the internet has transformed them into more interactive experiences, creating a sense of connection with celebrities

A big component in fuelling this obsession is media. Media plays a significant role in perpetuating this culture by obsessively covering celebrities' lives, whether good, bad, or ugly. This constant coverage reinforces the notion that these individuals are worth idolizing, creating a phenomenon known as Celebrity Worship Syndrome. Social media platforms amplify these connections, providing a direct link between celebrities and fans, further intensifying the culture. Marketing strategies also leverage celebrity endorsements and appearances to boost brand visibility.

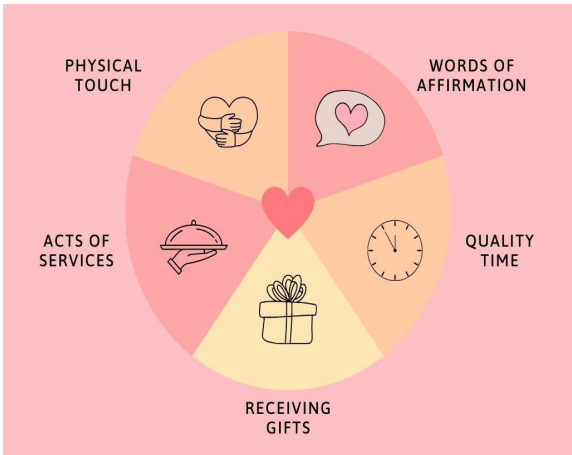

While we must acknowledge our own participation in this celebrity obsession ,the question arises: is our unending fascination with celebrities inherently good or bad?

The answer is more complex than you think. When celebrities utilize their platforms to address social causes or engage in activities that encourage positive actions, the constant stream of content becomes a potential source of inspiration. For instance, Princess Diana's interactions with HIV-positive patients and Deepika Padukone's openness about mental health issues have contributed to normalizing once-tabooed topics. This positive influence can lead people to do the same and open up more.

Celebrities' relatability and connection with the audience are enhanced when they engage in everyday activities, breaking the barrier between their real lives and on-screen characters. This phenomenon creates a sense of excitement among fans when celebrities partake in ordinary actions, challenging the narrative that celebrities are above mundane tasks. While some argue that celebrities, especially actors, with their massive fan following, are suitable representatives of our needs, it is essential to question the limits of our celebrity obsession. How far are we willing to go, and at what cost? The balance between appreciation for celebrity contributions and acknowledging the significance of everyday achievements in our lives is key to breaking free from the potentially harmful cycle of celebrity obsession.

Love beyond the love languages

The five love languages developed by Gary Chapman in the 1990s are different ways of expressing and receiving love: words of affirmation, quality time, receiving gifts, acts of service, and physical touch. Gary Chapman was a Baptist who wrote this book with the insights he gained from counselling married Christian couples. Chapman believes that people have different ways they prefer to show and receiving love. The most popular one is words of affirmation. This consists of encouraging, positive words showing that you care about this person and love them. "Action speak louder than words" best describes the love language of acts of service. Helping someone out with chores, and doing anything to lessen their workload, are all ways to show love and receive love through this love language. Showering love and appreciation through gifts have been a way of showing love since time immemorial. Quality time is an essential love language for many. Being present in the moment with your loved one is important in building a relationship. Lastly, sensations of touch with your loved ones are also a way of showing love and care. While love languages can serve as a framework on different ways we can show and receive love and care, it is also a flawed concept. To start with, Gary Chapman based this on married christian couples. But love, isn't limited to romantic relationships, and by creating an emphasis, it downplays the value that platonic, familial relationships can offer in our lives. Showing love differs in the many relationships we have. The gernalised concept of love languages can also feel too simplistic as it is not inclusive of sexuality, culture, trauma, neurodivergence, and more. Human relations are complex and is determined by a multitude of things such as childhood experiences, parenting styles, socio-economic factors, and so much more. A concept such as love languages cannot be applied in all situations. It is important to note that there is no one way to show and receive love and this concept is highly subjective and is determined by various aspects. As long as the intention is right, all ways of showing and receiving love are beautiful.

Can we seperate the art from the artists?

The concept of separating the art from the artist is a phrase used a lot in the age of the internet. There have been several debates and discussions on this controversial subject, with many media articles posing the fundamental question: Can one truly seperate the art from the artist? While some may argue that the value of art lies more in its impact on the audience than in the personal actions of the artist, others may say that we cannot separate the artist's persona from that of their creative output. Both of these hold true and the discussion on this topic is subjective. However, the lines are a lot more blurry than they seem. Our world has witnessed several problematic people come and go, who have contributed tremendously to the world of art. Take for instance, Pablo Picasso, founder of the cubist movement and making significant contributions to the world of modern art. While that is true, what's also true is that Picasso, was a deeply flawed man with harmful ideologies and when he was 45, he had a relationship with a 17 year old girl. Does Picasso's work still hold the same impact? And yet, he also was a renowned artist for his profound, work that continues to have an impact in the world of art. How do we hold these two opposing views together? We have to resist the urge to view this situation as black and white. We cannot discard the art completely and avoid teaching it in the first place. Instead, we can showcase the art and explain the history of the people behind them and their ideologies. We also cannot neglect the personal views of these artists, and continue to promote their art as that would mean dismissing and these artists' problematic views. We can recognize how artists' work has influenced the world of art and culture while acknowledging the larger issue at hand. This will involve publicly about the issues of some of these artists instead of avoiding them. The complexity intensifies when dealing with living artists. The phrase "separating the art from the artist" is often used as an excuse by contemporary creators who enjoy the work while overlooking moral issues. However, it is possible to appreciate an individual's talent and artistic vision while also recognizing their flaws and holding them accountable. Accountability is not the same as cancel culture. The former allows for reformation and change while the latter dismisses anything they have to say at all. We can hold conflicting views together as long as we acknowledge them and their impact.

Tweet of the day

Sudhanshu Kaushik
@sudhikaushik

One of the largest ways to contribute to developing India for young Indians is to allow them to have greater representation in decision-making at all forms of governance.

I'm hopeful to see more young people (below the age of 30) playing a part in active politics in 2024.

✉ You've got mail ✉

Separating art from the artist allows us to appreciate the work despite the creator's actions or beliefs. It allows us to engage with art for art, and have a better understanding of the art regardless of any controversies surrounding the artist.

- Zoya
Bengaluru

The article properly emphasizes that while love languages are a great way to show someone you care, they're not all-inclusive. It highlights the importance of considering individual experiences, trauma, and backgrounds.

- Regina
Bengaluru

The fascination with celebrities is like chasing shiny things in a desert – it looks appealing but lacks real substance. Let's focus on genuine connections and meaningful accomplishments instead of getting lost in the glitz and glam.

- Prerna
Bengaluru

The many faces of Apoorva

I first met Apoorva on a trek in coorg. From our very first interaction, I was enamoured by her and the energy she brought into the room. Juggling between being a full time lawyer at an investment bank, a passionate dancer and Carnatic music singer, a travel enthusiast and so much more. Apoorva, gets to the cafe on time as she sits down with me to have a chat about the many faces of her.

Question 1 : I remember during the coorg trip, you and your husband would take turns and have a sing off. Have you always been a music enthusiast?
Yes. I learned Carnatic music when I was a child, and have been singing ever since. I still make time to sing in competitions and of course, in treks laughs and I really like singing. The thing about singing too, you can sing anywhere - bathroom, in a public area, anywhere. I love dancing too but haven't been very consistent with it. On a recent trip to Vietnam though, I danced my heart out, it was a lot of fun.

Question 2 : Speaking of vietnam, how big of a travel enthusiast are you? I absolutely love travelling and travel quite often with family and friends. I actively make time for it because I think you can learn so much about the world and the people around you when you travel. That is one advice I would give younger people, if you are provided enough to have a bank account that allows you to travel - travel. Splurging money on travel isn't splurging, it's investing because the knowledge you gain is unparalleled.

Question 3: We met on a trek and since then I have been more interested in going to treks. When did you start trekking? I started trekking in 2018 and have been on quite a few treks since then. The best part about trekking is that you challenge yourself and you gain a better understanding of who you are away from the materialistic aspect of life and understand your needs better.

Question 4: What's at the top of your trek backlog? This is a bit ambitious laughs but the Everest base camp is a trek I've always wanted to go on.

Question 5: You introduced me to my favourite protein bar, and I know you have a plant based diet, tell me more about it. So, I went plant based in the beginning of 2021, during the pandemic and I was living alone and isolated from my family. I had an unhealthy lifestyle and when I began trekking, it started reflecting on my body, especially on high altitude treks. So, I did my research and I got into a plant based diet. I do have my binges every now and then with nut butter, which is my latest obsession, dark chocolate and more. A lot of plant based food is your diet of course, but so much of it is your lifestyle. When you're plant based you're more mindful about your intake. For me, Dal is comfort in a bowl and coffee is hope in a mug. I think the bigger picture of it is also sustainability. I started looking at my carbon footprint and saw what changes I can make and one of them is reducing my plastic usage. Even if I use plastic, I have to make sure that it's long lasting.

“ I would tell my younger self to take more risks, just go for it. ”

Question 5: I remember how warm and welcoming you were the first time I met you. Do you consider yourself to be a social person? Definitely when I was younger, I used to be a lot more social and outgoing. But now in my early 30s, I don't have the energy to, especially because I'm a workaholic. Now, my social circle is my husband, my family and my co workers. I'm a lot like my brother, who is an ambivert. I'm donning his hat.

Question 6: What is something that you've learnt from every hobby that you've integrated in your everyday life? Discipline. It helps you compartmentalise and sets you apart from other people. Second would be, enjoyment. There are times I don't feel excited about work but I realise I enjoy it because I've made it enjoyable for myself.

Question 7 : A cliched interview question but what is your life's purpose?
My life goal is not to become famous, or rich. At 60, I want to be able to travel the world. I've seen old European couples travelling the world with their backpacks and I love that. Also, having a good body that allows me to dance would be great haha

Question 8: Last question and I have to ask this given that you're an a lawyer at a corporate office. Have you watched suits? Haha, of course I have and I love it. very much

We end the interview with a hug and a memory I will forever cherish.

Navigating Neurodiversity as an adult

Saranya Ramesh

The day of my ADHD diagnosis remains vivid, etched in my memory as if it happened just yesterday. At 18 years old, on a Sunday morning, I anxiously awaited my turn at the therapist's clinic. Instinctively, I had always sensed the presence of ADHD within me, long before I knew the disorder. I was the eager class participant, speaking out of turn, filled with boundless energy, and enrolling in countless classes that I'd eventually abandon. ADHD, a neurodevelopmental disorder, significantly influences brain function and development. Its impact extends to personal relationships, professional endeavors, and emotional regulation, placing it within the broader neurodivergent spectrum alongside conditions like autism spectrum disorder, intellectual disabilities, and various learning and communication disorders. While ADHD diagnoses are more common in children, only 4.4% of adults worldwide are diagnosed. Yet, its prevalence is more significant than commonly perceived. ADHD manifests in three primary types: Inattentive, Hyperactivity, and a combination of both. For individuals like Guru, a 24-year-old content strategist, the diagnosis came at 23 due to struggles with task completion, impulsivity, and focus. Ananya and Vignesh, aged 23 and 22, respectively, sought diagnosis for their challenges in finishing tasks during college and work. The diagnosis brought a sense of catharsis, affirming feelings they had harbored throughout their lives. Recognizing the need for assistance as ADHD began impacting personal life, relationships, and career, individuals like Ananya emphasized the condition's pervasive influence. Emotional dysregulation, a common symptom, poses challenges, especially in a neurotypical world that lacks adequate support and understanding. Ananya expressed the desire for a more inclusive educational and workplace environment. Navigating this world demands strategies tailored to neurodivergent needs. Personally, therapy and mindfulness techniques proved beneficial for me, while Vignesh found dietary changes helpful. Despite individual coping mechanisms, existing in a world designed for neurotypicals remains challenging. Systemic flexibility, support groups, and accommodating environments are advocated by individuals like Guru and Ananya. Since my ADHD diagnosis at 18, my life has undergone profound transformations. Understanding myself better and making peace with my differences, I've learned to embrace being neurodivergent. The journey post-diagnosis has not been without challenges, Beyond the initial shame and the feeling of being a wallflower, the shared experiences within the ADHD community have brought a sense of acceptance and lightened the burden as each day passes.

Nolan's Magnum Opus: Oppenheimer

Saranya Ramesh

Art, particularly through cinema, has been a unifying force, transcending borders and addressing societal issues. Christopher Nolan, a cinematic maestro since his debut in 1998, presented the summer blockbuster "Oppenheimer," showcasing his trademark gripping storytelling and visual brilliance. The film explores the life of theoretical physicist J. Robert Oppenheimer, a key figure in the development of the atomic bomb during World War II. Portrayed by Cillian Murphy, Oppenheimer's character delves into the moral quandaries faced by scientists in the Manhattan Project. Nolan's non-linear storytelling, with black-and-white segments and IMAX shots, offers a visually captivating experience. Cinematographer Hoyte van Hoytema skillfully captures Oppenheimer's mental struggles through symbolic transitions. Cillian Murphy's outstanding portrayal, along with strong performances by Robert Downey Jr., Matt Damon,

source: google

and Emily Blunt, contributes to the film's success. However, Florence Pugh's character, Jean Tatlock, falls short in overall impact. Despite a lengthy runtime of 3 hours, the movie effectively conveys the broader message on nuclear weapons' implications in the modern world. "Oppenheimer" triumphs both artistically and commercially, grossing 890 million USD. It prompts viewers to ponder a profound question – must genius be accompanied by suffering?

Movie of the month

23 things Ive learned in the last 23
years of my life

Ask Miss K

source: google

Title: Dune 2
Genre: Sci-fi, Drama
Director: Denis Villeneuve
Synopsis: Paul Atreides unites the Fremen while seeking revenge against the conspirators who destroyed his family. Facing a choice between the love of his life and the fate of the universe, he must prevent a terrible future only he can foresee
Where to watch it?: Theatre-
Rating: 5/5

Every year, for her birthday, Youtuber, Alexa Losey bakes a cake and talks about things she has learnt in the years that have past her birthday. However, I'm not a YouTuber and certainly don't have the patience to bake a cake, so, here are 23 things I've learnt in the last 23 years of my life.

- 1) Drink water. No seriously, do it now.
- 2) Hug your loved ones and tell them how much you love them.
- 3) Get a pet, or two, or more.
- 4) Interact with people who aren't in the same social group as you.
- 5) Travel, as much as your bank account allows you to.
- 6) There is space for you in this world
- 7) All the relationships in your life - platonic, romantic, familial add value to your life, and there is no one relationship that is more important than the other.
- 8) Savour every moment you have with your loved ones.

- 9) There is no good or bad food, enjoy everything
- 10) Celebrate your roots
- 11) Hug your parents, thank them for raising you
- 12) Don't hug your brother, instead tackle him into a fight and show him how much you love him.
- 13) Jack of all trades, master of none is better than being a master of one
- 14) Know your worth and don't let anybody take that away from you.
- 15) Read the newspaper, be well informed.
- 16) You are not what happened to you, you are what you choose to be , after what happened to you
- 17) Take a leap of faith
- 18) Music is good for the soul.
- 19) Kindness is a superpower.
- 20) Eat more mangoes.
- 21) Being impulsive is good for your soul.
- 22) Just keep swimming
- 23) Take it easy, Urvashi

Q. I'm 19 and I don't have my life figured out yet, what do I do?

Dear Reader,
It's perfectly alright to not have it all figured out at nineteen! Take this time to explore different areas of interest, try new things and step out of your comfort zone. Don't pressurise yourself to have all the answers, life has a beautiful way of working itself out in due time. Just focus on learning what genuinely fulfils you, find meaning in the relationships you share and cherish all the time you have.

Q) How do I balance college life and having an active social life? HELP!

Dear Reader,
Balancing social and academic lives is a common struggle! While we all have numerous deadlines to work with, don't forget to take time out for self care; it's all about figuring out what works for you and how to say no when needed. Remember, learning this balance takes time, so be patient with yourself as you make mistakes while you figure things out.

Nostalgia in a movie: The Holdovers

Anya's reccomendations

Saranyaa Ramesh

In the current cinematic landscape dominated by big-budget productions like Oppenheimer and Barbie, there's a remarkable indie film called The Holdovers that captivates audiences with its simplicity and nostalgia. Echoing the settings of classics such as Good Will Hunting and Dead Poets Society, this small-scale movie directed by Alexander Payne steals the spotlight - in theatres and in the awards season. Set in 1970s New England at the all-boys boarding school Barton during winter holidays, The Holdovers centers around an unlikely trio. Professor Paul Hunham (played by Giamatti) teaches ancient civilizations, sharing similarities with Robin Williams' character in Dead Poets Society by burdening privileged students with facts and eccentric insults. Notably, this isn't the first collaboration between Paul Giamatti and Payne; they previously worked together in the film Sideways (2004), where Giamatti portrayed a gloomy, moody teacher. The narrative then introduces Angus Tully, a bright yet troublesome student left alone at school for Christmas played by Dominic Sessa, the spectacular debutant, and Mary Lamb, the cafeteria's head cook mourning her son's death in the Vietnam War, played by Da'Vine Joy Randolph who is so deserving of the award season buzz. Together, they embark on a charming journey, as they spend Christmas together alone, and yet somehow together.

Payne's previous line of work - Sideways. Nebraska, The Descendants, and this film, the holdovers have his directorial signature of melancholy and tragic humor, with a touch of nostalgia represented through faux grain and scratches for an authentic visual experience. Amidst the buzz of major blockbuster releases that cinema has witnessed in the last few months, the Holdovers stands out as a comfort movie for many. With potential Oscar nominations, for Da'Vine Joy Randolph as a strong contender for Best Supporting Actress, and Paul Giamatti for Best Actor, the film portrays that small movies, full of heart and soul will always have a place - in the cinema theatres and in our hearts.

source: google

Title: Whisper of the heart
Genre: Animation
Synopsis: The film follows Shizuku, an inquisitive young girl and a voracious reader, awa. Amid chasing after as she navigates her life through middle school.
Where to watch it?: Netflix
Rating: 4/5

Title: The Sound of Music-
Genre: Musical
Director: Robert Wise
Synopsis: A heartwarming story, based on the real life story of the Von Trapp Family singers, known as a concert group in the era i preceding World War II
Where to watch it?: Netflix
Rating: 4/5

source: google

source: google

Title: Abhiyum Naanum
Genre: Family
Director: Radha Mohan
Synopsis: A heartwarming story, of a father and daughter as they learn to navigate the different phrases of their life.
Where to watch it?: Prime Video
Rating: 4/5

Student Editor: Saranyaa Ramesh

Reported and Edited by: Saranyaa Ramesh

Staff Editor: Dr.Shilpa J

Department of Journalism

Mount Carmel College, Autonomous

This journal is purely for academic purposes.